Six Wins

By ED CONBOY

Kentucky's undefeated Wildcats leave tonight for Nashville, Tennessee, where they will encounter the Commodores of Vanderbilt University Wednesday. Vanderbilt has one of the most powerful teams in the Southern Conference. The Commodores have played only two conference foes, iosing to Georgia Tech, 44-39, and defeating the Florida Alligators, 44-25.

For the third time within two weeks the Big Blue will play a Tennessee team. Six games have been won by the Kentucky team and the records show six wins for an average of 1,000%.

Kentucky has played two teams of the conference and easily won both games. The Wildcats defeated the Clemson Tigers, 33-21, and walloped the Tennessee Vois, 31-23. The local boys have not shown any great offensive strength and their defense has been very ragged. Coach Adolph Rupp has some fine material with which he can produce a poilshed quintet.

The game tonight is the first game away from home. The Tennesseans have a small gymnasium and for this reason, the first varsity lineup will start the game. Rupp does not intend to take any chances and will place the best defensive five in the game.

does not intend to take any chances and will place the best defensive five in the game.

Following the Vandy contest, the Wildcats meet Tennessee on Jan. 31 in a return game there. The actual strength of the team will be shown in the encounter with Vanderbilt and should Kentucky win over the Tennessee aggregation, there are possibilities that the team may finish the season undefeated.

The ten men whom Rupp will take to Nashville are Capt. Carey Spicer and McGinnis, forwards; Yates and Sale, centers; Johnson, Trott, Jake Bronston, Kleiser and Worthington, guards.

At the present time there are eight undefeated teams in the conference race. Thy include the undefeated Georgia quintet with six wins; Alabama, Maryland and Auburn with a ciean slate of three victories and the Wildcats with Sewance with two games won and no defeats charged against them.

All of the paintings, except two were made five years ago in Finland, the home of the artist's people. Each picture required approximately two hours to complete, so that it provides an excellent example of direct and simple technique. The drawings are in the nature of explanations and criticisms for his student in life drawing. According to Professor Range of these the contract of th cisms for his student in life draw-ing... According to Professor Rannells, Mr. Forsberg is one of the few artists in America today who believes in thoroughness and exact information for his pictures, and who looks upon art as a subject for hard study, rather than merely as a mode of self-expression, as it is considered by many.

In Professor Rannells' opinion, escape his wrath. Always lurking Mr. Forsberg is one of the really behind buildings and under the beds

Mr. Porsberg is one of the really good figure draftsman in this coun-try, and he is hoping to interest more people in Forsberg's work. It is seldom that any extensive showood figure draftsman in this country, and he is hoping to interest more people in Forsberg's work. It is seldom that any extensive showing of one man's work comes to Lexington, and this exhibit therefore affords an extraordinary opportunity for lovers of art at the university and in the city.

Professor Rannells' talks will be very short and informal. Students and townspeople alike are invited to be present. In the evening the exhibition will be open at 7 o'clock for those who want to come and study the pictures before the lecture.

New Backfield Coach Will Also Assist With Track and Basketball ALABAMA STAR HAS EXCELLENT RECORD

Wallace Wade Highly Rec-ommends "Spinner" for Wildcat Mentor

John "Spinner" Campbell, of Durante, Miss., star halfback of the University of Alabama football team, will coach the Kentucky backfield this fall. Campbell was chosen last night by the athletic council of the university. Numerous men were mentioned for the position, including "Hank" Bruder of Northwestern University, John J. Elder of Notre Dame, "Mike" Farroh of Iowa, and Campbell of Aiabama.

roh of Iowa, and Campbell of Alabama.

It was only at the last minute when the choice apparently was between Bruder and Farroh that "Monk" Campbell asked to be considered for backfield coach. Elder was also asked by Mr. Gamage if he would consider the job.

Campbell played on Stoll field on November 1, with the mighty Crimson Tide of Alabama, who crushed the undefeated Kentucky eleven, 19-0. He closed his career against the great and undefeated Washington State aggregation by running 44 yards for a touchdown through the greatest line any team boasted this past season. Hen and Edwards of the coast team were mentioned for All-American berths and it was through these men, that "Spinner" Campbell reeled off his long run.

Campbell is a matured player and a brilliant student of the game. He showed the members of the athletic council that he thoroughly was acquainted with the game, by illustrating the plays and signals used by Alabama.

He is 25 years old and a senior at the University of Alabama, where he played varsity football during the years, 1928, 1929 and 1930. He is a good basketbail and baseball player and a dependable track star, although he has never competed in these sports while at Alabama.

According to S. A. Boles, athletic director, he will also assist in basketball and track. Kentucky has never had an assistant in these ports and Campbell will be a worthy addition to Adolph Rupp and Bernie Shively's competent coaching.

STUDENT POLITICS

The majority of students at the University of not seeking personal giory and they do not time. concern themselves about methods used by those who are. The average student, when he troubles to support anyone, supports a candidate for a campus office for one or both of two reasons personal friendship or desire for reflected importance. How powerful feels the student who can say "I elected him." What student would solicit votes-or would even vote-for a candidate merely because he believes that candidate can most competently fill the office?

Both in the university and in the world outside, politics is rather a disreputable institution. It is a game without rules and can be played only by those who are aware, that one can employ any tactics as long as one operates to one's own advantage. Personal gain is the foundation upon which politics, as it exists today, has been built. Students know the methods loyed by their leaders. They are aware of the illegitimate means used by office seekers. They see and sigh, "What of it!"

It often has been observed that many of the most powerful politicians are men who are personally detestable, men who have no appreciation for finer points of conduct, and whose only wealth: and since the average man does not care enough to think for himself, these men lieves that the student or the citizen who takes no interest in the election of the man who can best represent him has no reason to protest who blame Hoover for the current depression had voted for Al Smith . .

as well. Since he was elected by members of the staff he had to count the votes first and edit his paper second. He endeavored to become editor, not by the excellence of his work but by his personal popularity. Often it was positious to unworthy members of the reportorini staff as election time neared. The Kentuckian editor hitherto has been elected by members of the junior class who seldom regarded the andidate's ability as a major consideration Under regulation of the board of publication neuceforth, this arrangement will be considerbly modified.

At present the former crude but effective practices of election engineers have been almost entirely eliminated. The Board is composed of students and faculty members who have little ersonal interest in the candidates. All university elections cannot be conducted in this way but the Kernel believes that the domination of extra-curricular activity by a small group is apidiy drawing to a close and that both at the University of Kentucky and in similar instiutions ability is being more and more

Many campus offices require slight ability and for that reason it matters little if a stupid but popular candidate, is elected. To change an lection for a major office into a popularity contest, however, is quite a different matter.

EXAMINATIONS

With the radical changes that education now s undergoing, it is probable that within a comparatively few years examinations will have become obsolete. The death knell may soon begin to sound, but the future has no influence on the present, so far as students at the university are concerned.

An analysis of examinations reveals them as reveleations of the peculiar workings of the minds of learned professors, which so confound the unsuspecting student as to completely floor him in many instances. Nowhere is the feeling of an instructor toward the human race so inadvertedly exposed as in an examination.

The practical joker, the cosmopolite, the iterary fanatic, the man possessed with good common horse sense and the man who desired o make a last impression, all endeavor to make the most of the opportunity which compiling examination questions gives them. And the result is confusion for the victim.

Happily, the hours of trial are separated at the university by eating or sleeping; happily, the system of three one-hour grillings has been abandoned; happily, there is some island of Kentucky have no political ambition. They are reason on which the students may spar for

> The only advantage in examinations is that it promotes summarization of facts gleaned from course during a semester's study. But this advantage is missed by the professor who confounds his students with trick questions.

Our idea of a perfect examination question s: Write briefly what you have learned during the past semester in this course. The perfect system of grading would be to ave the professor grade himself after he had taken his own examination on the aforemen tioned questions. If he could pass it satisfactorily, then the studens might be graded on the manner in which they had answered our one fool-proof question.

We heard one student say a few days age that he had found the ideal method of studying, both during the semester, and then for ration is to gain personal prominence and exam week. When questioned he summarized it as follows: Get the outline of the course in mind as the semester progresses, and then cram gain distinction and power. The Kernel be- on the details for exam week. PENMANSHIP

The mechanical age aptly describes the era in which we are living. Everything possible is being done by machinery, and many things eemingly impossible. Aside from market crashes and collapsing business structures, the spirit of advancement, of achievement engendered by the use of machinery is eminently worth while. However, there are some things we do not care to see vanish from the face of the earth.

The one we have in mind at the present is the passing of good penmanship. It is seldom these days that a person is seen who can write beautifully with a pen, despite the prevalence of fountain pens. Everyone is turning to the typewriter.

In the ground floor of McVey hall there is a typewriter room established by the department of journalism for the use of students in that department. The machines are used not only by the journalists, but by students from every college on the campus. Their tribe is increasing rapidly-so rapidly in fact that the passing of good penmanship is at hand.

And then there was the classified advertise ment in a recent issue of The Lexington Herald. which stated that a Lexington business woman desired a young lady for a room mate, also room for gentleman. It is interesting to note that a Sigma Nu cailed and inquired about sleeping accommodations!

in which he outlined the needs of the university for the near future, stressed the fact that students at the present time, are living their coiiege life without one of the requisites of a true university. Doctor McVey had in mind a building in which students might gather between classes and for social events typical of university life. He pointed out that students of the University of Kentucky are handicapped by iack of an edifice in which to hold dances and other get-together meetings of the school year.

Breath Appeal Was Avoided Before Discov-ery of Medical Term

The story of how Listerine made halitosis famous, and vice versa, was told by Gordon Seagrove, of the Lambert & Feasley advertising agency, speaking before the drug and toilet goods group of the Advertising Club of New York. Seagrove is the author of the Listerine copy.

grove is the author of the Listerine copy.

His recital went back to 1921, when the Lambert Pharmacal Company was spending about $110,000 a year for advertising and showing profits of $115,000.

"There are hundreds of stories about how the halitosis idea was developed," he said. "Here's the real one.

"Marion Lambert, who has since died, had considered from time to time the possibility of advertising Listerine as a remedy for bad breath but had given it up for fear of offense to readers.

"Then a special meeting was heid in St. Louis to consider new appeais. Milton Feasley and I went down in St. Louis to consider new appeais. Milton Feasley and I went down from the agency of Williams & Cunnyngham, of Chicago, which then had the account.

"There was a lot of discussion at this meeting, and Marion Lambert brought up the subject of bad breath, but it was shelved. Finally we called in an old employe and asked him just what uses there were for Listerine, anyway. He enumerated the common ones, as mouth merated the common ones, as mouth wash, gargle for sore throat, etc and then added: 'And for halito term for bad breath and had been used in the company's literature for some time.

"We thought we had a fair idea there, but nothing to write home about. But Fessley and I went back to Chicago and wrote some copy on halitosis. We used some 200-line advertisements, without illustrations, in St. Louis newspapers, spending about $2,500 on the test.

"The results indicated we had a good thing; so Mr. Lambert asked the directors for $5,000 a month to spend on it, promising to drop the matter if it didn't show increases in net profit. Since then the advertising expenditure has been increased many times, but never has falled to bring back increased profits.

"Many people think the halitosis idea was solely responsible for Listerine's remarkable success. As a matter of fact, however, we are now spending about one-third on halitosis advertisementa, and two-thirds on other appeals. From August. 1926, to September 1927, we didn't use the halitosis theme at all: yet not profits continued to be greater than ever before."

"One Heavenly Night," which opens at the Kentucky today, presents the English star, Evclyn Laye, to Amreican chema audiences. She made a hit on the stage last season in the Noel Coward musical comedy "Bitter Sweet," and appears in this United Artists picture opposite John Boles. This production also contains music, and the story was written by Louis Bromfield and Sidney Howard. Comedy relief is provided by Leon Errol of the wobbly legs.

Although Warner Bros. were the first to present the sound dinus, they are just now learning how to use it. After aliowing all the other companies in the business to beat them at making musicals ("The Rogue Song" and "The Vagabond King," are examples) they come out with "Viennese Nights" which is now playing at the Ben All. This production is a spiendid indication as to the quality of musical entertainment possible on the Music is being heard again from the screens of Lexington with "Vi-ennese Nights" and "The Lettery Bride" on exhibition. This Fox picture tells of a wife who doesn't give her husband as much attention as he thinks he deserves and, at times, is clever. At other times it becomes strained out of proportion. Good acting helps to put a weak story over. -TLR-
